Today was productive—I spent time customizing my blog and setting up my laptop for development. Relearning the terminal and all its quirks felt like stepping back in time to my college days. Funny enough, I didn't exactly excel in that class; I barely scraped by with a D. On a less positive note, my hernia has been acting up, and I can't shake the worry that it's getting worse. Final thought of the night: I hope Luigi makes it out.
